

Reptilian Overlords by Sage Ruiz

As a sort of umbrella term, reptilian conspiracies can branch into some pretty crazy sub-conspiracies, but some of them are backed by evidence and science, while others sound like they came right out of a sci-fi movie. In fact, as of 2013, at least 12 million Americans believe that our politics are being monitored and controlled by celestial, reptilian beings. And if that didn't sound crazy enough, it gets better: some of those people will think that these beings have been here since the dawn of time, while others will say that they've been visiting us periodically since Egyptian society had been established, and others will try to tell you that they came during the crash in Roswell.

Despite how they got here to begin with, they have been here for decades, maybe even centuries or millenia, but as reptilians, they also have a mortal life. This means that they have been reproducing somehow, and here's where things take another turn towards crazy. These beings have supposedly been altering the human DNA to make it compatible with their own, and in turn have created or produced cross-breeds between humans and reptilians, which could have been gods or demi-gods during ancient Babylonian/Mesopotamian time. Because of this cross-breeding, 2 classes of reptilian were born, full bloods and the cross-breeds. These 2 classes are different in more than just one way, from the way they disguise themselves to their own self-consciousness.

While a full blood will know that they are a reptile, a hybrid or cross-breed won't necessarily. Full bloods allegedly use vibrations that alter the human perception of them, making them appear as normal humans without any physical change, whereas a hybrid will typically think it is a regular human, but will be under the control of the lower fourth dimension (which we'll come back to in a minute) to push forward whatever their agenda may be. Amongst these 2 classes, are also different "species" if you will, with different levels of authority in an established hierarchy.

If you've ever heard of Rh negative blood types, then you are in for a roller coaster of emotions. Just stick with me, this might get a little tricky to follow, but having Rh negative blood is extremely rare, with only about 15% of the the United States population being born with it, and 6-7% in the world (approximately 500 million people). It also means that you don't have the Rhesus monkey protein in your blood cells, unlike the Rh+ factor. This is a rather big deal, for if an Rh+ woman were to conceive a child, that child would run a 50% chance of being Rh-, which would result in the mothers Rh- fighting anti-bodies basically attacking the fetus. A mother's body attacking it's own offspring is unheard of in any other animals, for it usually happens when the baby is not viable, or compatible with the mother. The only other documented cases of this rare occurrence have taken place between horse and donkey, when the mule fetus is not viable. Otherwise, an animal is able to reproduce with any other creature of its own species, so why does this happen?

Let me tell you why: when an animal mates with another animal that is not of it's own species, the offspring will either never form to begin with, or die in the womb. The origin of the Rh negative factor in human blood is still unknown, and, again, has only occurred during the cross-breeding between a donkey and a horse, resulting in a sterile Rh- mule.

Now that we have that foundation laid down, the Rh- factor is currently only documented during cross-breeding. If the reptilian overlords (for lack of a better word) had altered the human DNA to make cross-breeding for the sake of reproduction and inadvertently had left a trace of this Rh- factor behind, we could trace their existence as far back as it could scientifically go. After all, only creatures of similar genetic makeup can reproduce successfully, so where does this incompatible blood line come from?

Rh blood is recessive, so it will not very often be passed on from parent to child unless both parents have Rh blood types. But, here's another what if:

What if the reptilians are still here as we speak, and they have been here for generations, through royal families, political parties, governmental experimentations, and who knows what else they could have reign over?

And blood is supposedly very important to these beings, from consuming it, to keeping their bloodlines pure, this red liquid influences their every day life in one way or another. Keeping this Rh- factor in mind, imagine if they did come here during early 4800 B.C, and started the early civilizations of Babylon and Egypt, and they were seen as demi-gods, therefore having good reason to only mate within their own family tree, keeping the bloodlines pure.

"The leader of the Earth's Illuminati is called the "Pindar". The Pindar is a member of one of the 13 ruling Illuminati families, and is always male. The title, Pindar, is an abbreviated term for "Pinnacle of the Draco".

Symbolically, this represents the top of power, control, creation, penetration, expansion, invasion, and fear." (<http://humansarefree.com/2014/07/the-reptilian-aliens-and-council-of-13.html>)

I'm sure all of you are familiar with Prince Charles, right? Well, there have been a few situations with him and the rest of his family that have nearly revealed their identities, one of the allegations from Princess Diana herself. She says they are "literally not human" and "reptiles" She had grown to believe that the British monarchy was her enemy, not her friend. The M16 and M17 members, along with members of parliament and military offices swear an oath to the monarch, not the United Kingdom. In fact, this allegation came to the light once again when Princess Diana was assassinated. Mohamed Al-Fayed, the father of Diana's lover, Dodi Al-Fayed, brought up the fact that Prince Charles could have placed a price on her head for her attempts to expose him and his family.

Here are just a few videos of reptilian powers, if you're still skeptical.
